AI WON'T TRANSFORM YOUR ORG. PEOPLE WILL.

What it actually takes — beyond the tech stack

● THE REAL GAP

PRODUCTIVITY ≠ TRANSFORMATION

Most organisations have individuals using AI to move faster. The rest? Still at the same speed.

You get faster silos. Not a faster company.

Closing that gap isn't a technology problem. It's a trust and engagement problem.

● DOMAIN EXPERTS

THEY FEEL THE STOPWATCH ON THEIR OWN JOB

Specialists who've mastered a process over 10–20 years are being asked to map it out for an agent.

The reframe that works: they're not training a replacement — they're becoming the steward of it.

Nothing gets automated once and left. The domain expert is the most valuable person in the AI's ongoing evolution.

● GOVERNANCE

NOBODY HAS THE RECIPE YET

Over-controlled: guardrails so tight the capability becomes unusable.

Under-controlled: 10,000 rogue agents — impressive and alarming in equal measure.

The right answer is iterative. One room. 30 minutes. Make a decision. Document it. Move. Anyone claiming to have the governance formula is selling something.

● THE PROTOTYPE TRAP

SLICK CAN QUIETLY BECOME UNWORKABLE

A client came with a vibe-coded prototype: "Build me that." No backlog. No brief.

It had accumulated features until the experience was overloaded. What should have been a clean journey had become a mess.

Speed of prototyping is real. Without structured design underneath, you're building on sand.

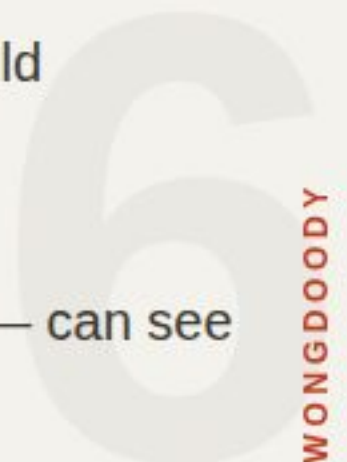

● WHAT WORKS

DESIGN FIRST. THEN BUILD.

Run the full human-centred design process before anyone writes a line of code:

User research → team alignment → user journeys → AI-assisted mapping → shared board → build environment.

The output is structured. The decisions are traceable. Everyone — security, privacy, product — can see their inputs shaped the outcome.
